What Makes an Effective Team?

The main point of “What Google Learned From Its Quest to Build the Perfect Team” focuses on the factors that make an amazing team in the real world. For example, Google created this study, codenamed: “Project Aristotle,” and studied certain groups of its employees to further understand the dynamic between them. I learned from this article how crucial respect, communication and effort are, and the impact that they have on a team. I found Rozovsky’s bad experiences with her group at Yale to be relatable to my own experiences with my boss. The negative effects that comes with facing these people are real, and I have noticed they affect my performance. I’ve realized that when he comes around, I become so focused on walking the line and not making a mistake in front of him, and it’s not a good environment to be in. I feel that this article has helped me become more aware of the way I behave in the teams that I have been on/am currently a part of; and I hope that I can always be a good teammate as a result.
